"Political Science" is a broad area of study in the Italian academic tradition and includes all the subjects concerned with political institutions and processes: history, law, economics, sociology and political science.

The Faculty has been founded on January 7th 1926 by a Royal Decree Law and today it is ranked as the 2nd best faculty in Italy (Censis/La Repubblica Guide 2006).

It offers courses on over 100 subjects and presently has about 2,000 undergraduate students. The academic staff is composed of about 80 members. The Faculty admits students with a five-year High School diploma (18-19 years old). There is no other limit to entry and no limit to the actual time taken to complete the full undergraduate degree course.

The Faculty offers both Undergraduate and Postgraduate Degrees.

At the Undergraduate level (laurea triennale) the degrees offered by the Faculty are the following:

- Scienze Sociali per la Cooperazione e Sviluppo (CeSV);
(Social Sciences for Cooperation and Development)
- Governo e Amministrazione (GeA) (Government and Administration);
- Scienze politiche (Political Science):
  - Scienze politiche (SP);
(Political Science)
  - Scienze e Relazioni Internazionali (SeRI);
(International Sciences and Relations)
  - Politica, Economia e istituzioni Europee (PeIE);
(Politics, Economics and European Institutions)

At the Postgraduate level the Faculty of Political Science offers the following degrees:

- Economia, Politica e Istituzioni Internazionali (PeII);
(Economics, Politics and International Institutions)
- Governo e Amministrazione Locale (GeAL);
(Local Government and Administration)

THE ITALIAN UNIVERSITY SYSTEM

Language of the courses

Courses are mainly taught in Italian but some courses will be taught in English in the first semester.

In some courses visiting Erasmus students may also agree with the lecturer an alternative readings list in English, and may request to take exams in English.

Attendance of the lectures

Lectures are considered as compulsory. Students are also strongly encouraged to attend seminars and conferences organized outside the regular lecture hours.

The Italian credit system

CFU CREDITS ARE EQUIVALENT TO ECTS CREDITS.

Each CFU credit consists of 25 hours of formative activity (Lectures, individual study, seminars, tutorials).

Courses of 9 CFU = 6 hours per week for 10 weeks = 60 hours total

Courses of 6 CFU = 4 hours per week for 10 weeks = 40 hours total

Courses of 3 CFU = 4 hours per week for 5 weeks = 20 hours total

The Italian grading system

Italian grades go from 00/30 to 30/30. The lowest grade in order to pass the exam is 18/30.

Italian Grades	ECTS Grades
30 – 30 lode	A
28 – 29	B
25 – 26 – 27	C
21 – 22 – 23 – 24	D
18 – 19 – 20	E

Course description:

Title of the course : Constitutions and constitutionalism in contemporary Europe.

The course presents the constitutional development of the European states in the last two centuries, with special reference to the cases of Italy, France, Germany and the United Kingdom.

The course deals with the following topics:

- the historical antecedents of the constitutional state in Europe;
- the institutions of the 19th century constitutional state, with a focus on the forms of the government, the role of the legislatures and the timing and modes of the expansion of political citizenship.

The approach of the course is one of comparative history: the main features of the method of comparative historical analysis will be presented; convergences or divergences in the paths of institutional development will be discussed.

Course description:

The course offers an analysis of one of the main institutions of modern politics: the parliament. In the first part of the course, the focus is on democratic parliamentary assemblies, examined in a comparative perspective. The aim is to sketch the variety of functions that parliaments play in contemporary democratic political systems, to point out their place in the institutional designs of these regimes, and to evaluate their contribution to the overall performance of the political system. The second part of the course puts the representative assemblies in a wider historical perspective – the perspective of historical political science. Starting from the premise that the structures of political representation, long before they spread across the world, were typically a west European phenomenon, it explores the conditions that favoured the creation of different forms of “parliaments” in the last centuries of the Middle Ages, and their evolution and their fate alongside the development of the modern nation state.

Course description:

The course aims to introduce to students the basic dynamics of economics and development in the framework of a gender perspective. Throughout the course a focus will be put on both, women in industrialised countries and women in developing countries. A multidisciplinary approach will be adapted in exploring themes such as:

- The international debate on gender issues and the role of the most important international agencies and organizations (UN systems, UNDP, UNIFEM, World Bank, etc.): from the WID approach (Women in development) to the GAD approach (Gender in development)
- Gender, development and globalization: the role of women in developing and developed societies
- Gender equality and the Millennium Development Goals
- Gender-related human development indicators and the measurement of empowerment in the UNDP
- women and human development between universal values and cultural relativism: the capability approach formulated by Amartya Sen and Martha Nussbaum
- gender discrimination, segregations and disparity in labour markets;

- paid and unpaid work: meanings, figures and debates

Textbooks recommended:

A more detailed programme and a reading list will be provided during the course.

Visiting Erasmus students are permitted to answer their exam questions or make their presentation in English.

-lecturer: Marco Missaglia

-e-mail: marco.missaglia@unipv.it

-40 hours

-course language: Italian

-1st Semester

- Written exam with the possibility for the students (just an option!) to add an oral exam so as to try to improve the mark

-6 Credits

Course description:

The course is intended to provide the students with the basic tools to understand the economic effects of international trade. Such effects will be analysed from the perspectives of consumption, production and social welfare, so as to make possible a comprehensive analysis of trade policies.

Among trade policies, special emphasis will be put on those policies (tariffs, quotas, etc.) intended to limit the extent of international trade.

Module A

- The Ricardian model of international trade and the theory of comparative advantages;
- International trade and factors' endowments: the model with specific factors and the Heckscher-Ohlin model;
- Imperfect competition, economies of scale and international trade;

Module B

- Trade Policies and protectionism
- The debate protectionism versus free trade
- Trade Policies and industrial policies

Textbooks recommended:

Module A

P. Krugman, M. Obstfeld, Economia Internazionale, Milano, Hoepli, 2003, capitoli 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 (appendici al capitolo 6 escluse), 12.3, 12.4

Module B

P. Krugman, M. Obstfeld, Economia Internazionale, Milano, Hoepli, 2003, capitoli 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12.3, 12.4

This text is thought to serve the interest of the Italian students. However, the text of Krugman and Obstfeld is originally written in English (the title is “International Economics”) and in any case any basic manual of international economics can be studied after having agreed with the lecturer which chapters are to be considered relevant.

Course description:

The course aims to provide students with the analytical tools to understand the functioning and the problems of contemporary economies under the point of view of microeconomics. The approach is one that presents microeconomics as a theory of society, state and markets as complementary institutions and introduces the basic elements of contemporary welfare economics. In particular, the course will illustrate the theoretical models of the optimizing behaviour of the consumer and of the firm and the model of the general economic equilibrium; the former analytical frameworks are preliminary to the comprehension of the models of international economics, development economics, as well as of some of the main issues of contemporary economic debates.

The course aims are:

-to present a reconstruction of the emergence and consolidation of democratic regimes in Western Europe

-to provide students with the analytical tools to understand the different paths of democratization in Western European countries, with special reference to the advent of mass politics and to the political integration of the working class.

Through the analysis in detail of the cases of Great Britain and Germany, the course intends to clarify how the political and institutional legacy constrained both the ways of dealing with and resolving the most important political cleavage of the XX Century, the conflict between capital and labor, and the subsequent political evolution, in terms of political stability and consolidation of the regime.

Course description:

The first part of the course sets the theoretical bases of the sociological concepts of action, interaction, uncertainty and institution. Thanks to elemental notions of game theory, the various social mechanisms which bring about dilemmas of collective action are also considered. The second part of the course considers one of the main organizational debate of the 20th century: market exchange versus hierarchical plan, as a way of organizing economic activities. Thence, the organizational dynamics of the giant hierarchy of the Soviet plan are analyzed; the plan's collapse, owing to deep dilemmas of collective action, is finally explained.

The aim of the course is to focus attention on the nexus between land-use, planning and the law. The central question around which this course will focus is: “How can we regulate land-use in an effective and legitimate manner?”.

Lectures cover the following topics:

- the traditional idea of land-use planning;
- criticisms to the traditional idea of land-use planning (the problem of dispersed knowledge and the ideal of the rule of law);
- the city as a complex system;
- innovative forms of land-use regulations (reinventing planning or exploring new modes of intervention?);
- the role of self-organizing (contractual) communities: advantages and risks.

Textbooks recommended:

Readings will be provided during the lectures.
